A Sudden Death.

Eliphalet Porter of Waterford Passes Suddenly Away at the Elm House as the Result of a Shock.

Wednesday afternoon occurred the sudden death of a well-known and estimable citizen of our western neighbor town of Waterford, Eliphalet Porter. With Mrs. Porter he had come to Norway to attend to some trading in several business places, taking dinner at the Elm House.

Shortly after three o'clock they started to return with their team to Waterford. When in front of the ADVERTISER office, Mr. Porter suffered a paralytic shock. Mrs. Porter immediately turned the team about and at the Elm House Mr. Porter was assisted by several men into the hotel. Medical aid was summoned and all possible efforts put forth to save his life, but he sank away and at 4 30, died.

He was a member of one of the old families of Waterford and was born in that town, his father being Alvin Porter. He spent his boyhood in his native village, then went to Boston and New York, in the latter place being clerk in a bank. For several years he has spent most of his time in his old home town. He was a very genial man, and one of an exceptionally happy frame of mind. He was of a literary turn of mind and a writer of some ability. He was 59 years of age.

Saw Mill and Block Business Sold.

The sawmill and die block business owned by the late N. J. Cushman has been sold to Irish Brothers & Co. of Buckfield. Mr. and Mrs. Herman Wardwell have moved into the lower part of the house owned by Mrs. Cushman. Mr. Wardwell has a partnership in the business. Luther Irish is here and boards with them for the present. Mrs. Cushman will remain here for a short time longer, when she intends to have an auction of part of her household goods, and then intends to go to live with her daughter, Mrs. Mabel Pike, at Livermore Falls.

Ernest Jackson has just got over the measles.

Will Farr's children are having the measles.

Mrs. Elmira Bicknell of Norway is the nurse at W. H. Emery's.

Eva Bryant of Bethel is visiting her sister, Mrs. James Boyce.

Frank Verrill has had a sick spell and confined to the house several days, but is now better.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Aldrich have moved to Norway, where Mr. Aldrich works in the shoe shop.

Chester Lane and Arthur K. Shurtleff went to Bethel Tuesday evening to be gone a few days on a fishing trip.

Will Pratt and family have moved from South Woodstock and are now living with his father on Pioneer street.

Mrs. Cousins has finished working for Mrs. Frank Small and gone to help Mrs. Annie Emmons, who is still quite sick.

Mrs. Sarah Curtis has got moved back into her house, which she left two or three years ago and has been living with her sisters at Rumford.

Rev. J. E. Pendleton of Bates College will preach at Free Baptist church next Sunday. Mr. Pendleton has been supplying at Bryant's Pond part of the time during the winter and spring, and is liked very much.

George Wright, a young Englishman, who has been here working for different farmers on High street and for the Linen Manufacturing Co. at Snow's Falls, has started on a visit to his home in England. He expects to return in about a month.

Dr. F. Y. Gilbert again visited Dr. F. E. Wheeler over Sunday. Dr. Gilbert is from the Eye and Ear Infirmary, Portland, and is a specialist in diseases of the head. Saturday afternoon, he accompanied Dr. Wheeler to George Felton's, where he performed an operation on one of his sons for polypus of the nose and a throat trouble, which proved very successful. Dr. and Mrs. Wheeler will be away the first week in June for a vacation, at which time he will attend the Maine Medical Association at Portland. Mrs. Wheeler will visit her people in Bath. They will also visit Boston and other places before their return.

Our citizens are looking forward with much patriotic enthusiasm to Memorial Day. Exercises for the day are to be held here. The G. A. R. and W. R. C. of South Paris, also the Spanish war soldiers, are coming on the forenoon train, whence they will march to the cemetery to decorate the graves. A dinner at 12.30 will be served in Centennial hall, which will be free to soldiers and members of the W. R. C. and Cuban soldiers. All others are expected to bring lunches or be entertained by friends. An address will be given by Rev. J. H. Little of South Paris at Dunham's hall at 2 o'clock. There will be music by a mixed quartet, and a flag drill by eight boys. It is hoped that a large number will be present from the surrounding sections.

Onward Rebekah Lodge held their annual fair and sale this week. They had on exhibition a tastily arranged fancy work table, an apron table, lunch counter, ice cream and candy booth, bag lines, doll and other interesting features, also an album quilt and nice silk quilt for sale. The evening's entertainment will consist of musical selections by Mrs. Farnum. Miss Millett and Alice Barden, a fan drill by eight young ladies, and a 40-minute farce, entitled "Two of a Kind," with the following cast of characters:

Mrs. Rebecca Rhubarb Mrs. Mildred F. Davis
Mrs. Araminta Rhubarb Bertha A. Emmons
Keturn Melon Mrs. Cora D. Lurvey

Cure every kidney ill from Common backache to diabetes.

Mr. Joseph Clewley, of 47 Church street, bookkeeper for J. E. Knox & Co., Lynn, Mass., manufacturers of dies and cutting tools, says: "I used several prescriptions from physicians, trying to get relief from attacks of backache. The pain was in the region of the kidneys, and the medicine seemed to relieve me for the time being, but it always returned. If I took cold it was always worse, and at such times I was downright sick. I had a severe attack and used Doan's Kidney Pills. The first box relieved me a great deal. Continuing the treatment a short time longer I was entirely cured, and I have had no return of the complaint."

HEARTS COURAGEOUS

By HALLIE ERMINIE RIVES

Copyright, 1902, by The Bowen-Merrill Company

"Aye," burst Henry fiercely. "Another Tory tale! And they will waver again. Tom, Tom, it must be now or never!"

He stopped abruptly and strode across the churchyard over the matted ivy on the shrunken mounds and, threading his way between the old slate tombstones, upright like black lichened coffin lids, entered the edifice.

* * * * * * *

From her seat in the west gallery whither Jefferson had taken her, Anne surveyed the scene below.

The first proceedings interested her little — the reading of Jamaica's late memorial to the king—and her gaze wandered. Through the open windows she could hear the hum of the great crowd about the building and catch a glimmer of the foaming James. The space below her was packed and full of a strange intentness.

Here and there she could see faces which she knew. The ladies of Richmond were scattered through both galleries. Freneau and young St. George Tucker were leaning over the rail opposite. Jefferson and Colonel Benjamin Harrison of Berkeley sat together just below Peyton Randolph, the president.

Colonel Washington sat far back, hands on knees, quiet and meditating, and just below her Mr. Thomas Nelson shifted nervously in his seat, turning his eyes now there, now here.

Well to the front sat Richard Henry Lee of Chantilly, "the gentleman of the silver hand." The black bandage he wore over his hand fascinated her. She had heard it said he wore it to hide a wound he got swan shooting on the Potomac.

Her attention came back with a start as she heard the resolution in answer to Jamaica that "it is the most ardent wish of this colony, and we are persuaded of the whole continent of North America, to see a speedy return to those halcyon days when we lived a free and happy people." As she looked down at Henry, Anne saw that he was scribbling on a scrap of paper.

There was a hush as he arose and a buzz of expectancy as he mounted the rostrum. He held in his hand the paper upon which he had been scribbling.

Anne felt a touch of disappointment at the cold, measured quality of his tone. With that flickering half smile which meant dissent he moved an amendment to the Jamaica resolutions. He read without a gesture, in pronunciation as plain as homespun. His voice moved evenly, almost carelessly, over the periods.

But as he progressed the assembly awoke with a shock, and Anne saw a certain ripple almost of alarm surge over it. Henry had spoken the phrase, "our inestimable rights and liberties."

At that moment the speaker raised his voice, and the last words came challenge-like, the snap of a whip. "We do resolve, therefore, that this colony be put in a state of defense and that there be a committee to prepare a plan for embodying, arming and disciplining such a number of men as may be sufficient for that purpose."

Anne looked at Henry in the black clothes and tie wig which set off his face and drew a breath. The humility, the diffidence, the modesty of address were gone, and in their place was sternness. Even his voice had grown harsh, as though in menace, and on the convention, uncertain and wavering, those lovers of the "halcyon days," the menace fell. It was the plunge from hesitation to resolve, from expostulation to powder. The fire had fallen!

Henry knew his men. All these years he had been learning them, drawing them out, questioning, story telling, watching effects, experimenting in their emotions.

His eye held every man within those walls. He turned it upon Richard Henry Lee, and he, his polished oratory forgot, hurled a blunt second at the chair.

Mr. Pendleton, Colonel Harrison, limping from the gout, and Colonel Richard Bland got upon their feet with arched frowns, barking that such action was "premature," and at the word Anne saw a pale scorn burn Henry's face. These, who had so lately sat in the Continental congress, prated of "dignified patience," "filial respect and discretion," "the relenting of the sovereign," "the nakedness of the colonies."

Anne had afterward no certain recollection of how Henry began in answer. All impression was swallowed up in that thrill which held every hearer. It has been said that he spoke as Homer wrote.

"Shall we shut our eyes—we wise men struggling for liberty—and listen to the song of the siren till she transforms us to beasts?" he cried. "Shall we, having eyes, see not, and, having ears, hear not the tidings of our temporal salvation? For my part I will know the worst, and I will provide for it. I cannot judge the future but by the past, and by the past how shall you solace yourselves? What is there in the conduct of the British ministries of the past ten years to justify hope?"

As he went on passion crept over his face like the wind that precedes a storm; his lean neck was scarlet and corded with white lines, and his eyes glared hollowly.

"Do you regard the insidious smiles with which our petitions are received? Be not betrayed with a kiss!"

Sitting in a quiver of feeling, with fingers clasping the gallery ledge, Anne felt the shaken pulses of the audience. Under the intrepid metaphor she saw the messenger of the colonial assembly standing before the king's attorney general entreating that Virginia had souls to be saved as well as England, and the brutish answer: "D— your souls! Make tobacco." She saw the colonies supplicating on their knees, spurned, contemned, spit upon. She saw the chains forging, navies building, armies gathering. She saw British ministers, like harpies, with cold eyes upon the green of the Americas.

Henry's voice had risen louder, more intense, and his colorless features and eyes of fire had become terrible to look upon. He sat upon the whirlwind. The very walls seemed to rock with vibrations.

"There is no longer any room for hope. If we wish to be free, if we mean to preserve inviolate those privileges for which we have been so long contending, if we mean not basely to abandon the struggle we have vowed never to abandon until its object be obtained, then we must fight. We must fight! An appeal to arms, to the God of Hosts, is all that is left us."

Anne dragged her eyes from Henry's. Amid the sea there was one face that had not moved a line. It was Colonel Washington's. He sat stonelike, as immovable as a bishop at his prayers, his hands still upon his knees. He was as a soldier should be—cool of head and saving passion for the hand. And as a soldier he was slow to disallegiance. But cold as he seemed when Henry bent the wills of that assembly and whipped the conservatives to the wall, there was a glitter in his eye that leaped to flame behind the quiet mask.

"They tell us that we are weak. When shall we be stronger? Will it be next week, or next year? When we are totally disarmed and when a British guard is in every house? Shall we lie still till our enemies have bound us hand and foot? We cry 'Peace, peace,' but there is no peace. Why stand we here idle? What do you wish? We are three millions of people, armed in the holy cause of liberty and invincible! We shall not fight our battle alone! The war is inevitable, and let it come! Let it come!"

Henry's voice, which had been like a battle shout, sank in his throat. His form bowed itself in the attitude of a galley slave. On his crossed wrists the felon's manacles seemed actually to be visible. His very tone thrilled helplessness and heartbroken agony.

"And if we chose," he said heavily, "there is no retreat save slavery. Our chains are ready. We may hear their clanking on the plains of Boston! Is life so dear or peace so sweet as to be so purchased?"

He lifted his chained hands toward heaven. "Forbid it," he prayed, "Almighty God!"

With the words he straightened. His tendons strained against the fetters, and they fell from his wrists as he sent a look at the quaking loyalists of the house that chilled their blood.

"I know not what course others may take"—oh, the hissing scorn of that now triumphant voice!—"but as for me—as for me—give me liberty or give me death!"

Anne heard what followed as in a dream. She heard the studied oratory of Richard Henry Lee, aided by the elegant gestures he practiced before the mirror. She heard Thomas Nelson, the richest man in Virginia, no longer shifting in his seat, now crying out that if British troops should be landed in the county of which he was lieutenant he would obey no forbidding, but call his militia and repel them at the water's edge.

"As for me, give me liberty or give me death!"

She saw standing on the committee appointed to carry out Henry's resolution to arm the colony—greatest marvel of all—the very men who had cried out against it, Mr. Pendleton, Colonel Harrison, Colonel Bland.

At that moment a vast army began forming. From those walls in which later Benedict Arnold was to quarter his British marauders the message flew that day. One by one the battalions gathered, strong, but invisible. They were not called by drum or trumpet. They had no camp nor field nor garrison. But at plow, in shop or in chamber the recruits silently answered the summons and stood ready.

It had been the hour and the man. The hour had started the initial impulse of the Revolution, and the man was Patrick Henry.

CHAPTER XII.

"SHUT the door!" the earl commanded.

Foy did so and returned to his seat across from the governor in the arras walled council chamber at the palace. He sent a snaky look at Armand, who sat at ease in egg-blue satin and lace, attired for the evening's rout. And the look was malevolent.

Lord Dunmore's face this night focused slow hate, and he sat hunched in his chair. "Has Conolly come from the ship yet, Foy?" he asked.

The other shook his head.

"Hell's tooth!" raved the earl, leaping from his seat and striding up and down. "I'll show them! Tomorrow they shall whistle for their powder! There are the Indians still, and then the slaves. If I have to raise the plantations, I'll bring these sniveling rebels to their knees! Freedom, forsooth! 'Tis the king's hand rules, and my hand for the king's in the Virginias!"

He paused in front of Armand and beat the table with his fist.

"And the slipperiest of them all you shall snare us, my fine marquis. 'Tis Patrick Henry! Haunch of a basted swine! A nice picture his tongue licks up for the clods! He is in Williamsburg tonight, and he shall not leave it till he sails for London and a gallows tree!" He strode off again in a rage, his face working like a Satan's.

At last he left off. "Give him his orders, Foy," he said quickly.

Foy leaned forward, chin in palm, and spoke.

"You will write a message now to Henry which I shall dictate. It will state that you are in receipt of news from France affecting the colonies and desire his immediate presence at a place which I shall name. You shall go thither to await Henry and detain him there till my own arrival with an armed file. Do I make myself clear?"

The young foreigner waved his embroidered arm lightly. "I beg to remind his excellency of our bargain."

The governor faced around with something like a snarl and sat down heavily.

"I was to write certain letters to De Vergennes, King Louis' minister, and to Beaumarchais—letters in the hand of the Marquis de la Trouerie, signed with his signature and seal. These have been written. They have said of the situation in this colony only what you would have them say, have they not? And you have sent them. Is it not so?"

The earl narrowed his eyes.

"I have done your excellency's bidding. You are not satisfied. Very good, monsieur. We turn the page then."

"Ho!" said Foy. "'Tis not as difficult for a nobleman to get money, eh, Master Clerk? What fine colonial bird have you plucked now? I' faith, a nice swagger of a sudden! Marry! Art going to wed with a plantation then?"

Lord Dunmore snorted and threw himself forward in his chair.

"Nay!" he shouted. "The bargain ends not here, my lily livered poacher! Letters, haith, when there is open rebellion? Small need I have for pen work now! 'Tis neck twisting I am for, and you shall aid me with a bait for that stubborn rump Henry!"

Foy drew forward pen and paper. "Will you write?" he asked.

"No," said Armand composedly.

His lordship's face, from livid, turned a volcanic purple.

"Your excellency," went on the young man, "will recall my social position. Spy? Betray? Surely not, messieurs!" He moved his hand as though dismissing an indiscreet pleasantry.

The earl bit off an oath with head thrust forward. His jaw dropped like a lion lapping blood.

Armand had risen. "I shall see you tonight amid the ladies, monsieur?" he asked of Foy. "A very good night to your excellency."

"I shall be eager to carry out any plans your excellency may be pleased to favor," said Foy as the door closed.

The Apollo room that evening was a blaze of splendor. It was the last dance of the old regime. All knew the nearness of the cloud. All heard the rumble of the storm. But courtesy in Virginia was as the grain in wood. There it was not until the last that Tories had perforce to leave the colony; when all who were not Tories turned Democrats and went into the Revolutionary armies; when gentlemen took the field and their ladies toiled at home with lint or homespun.

Now, though the bolt was speeding, until it fell Tory and Whig met and danced in tavern and in hall. Smile and bow changed not a whit. Sparkle was over all.

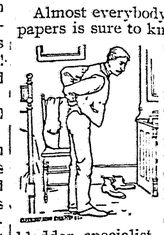

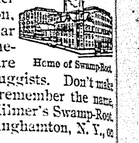

But it was only a shell of gayety. The core was a volcano.

In the outer hall of the Raleigh, behind the shifting throng of gallants at the door of the Apollo room, Jarrat looked across a minuet and in glimpses caught between the stately moving figures he saw Anne.

Never had she seemed so beautiful, her head golden misted in the light, her long, fringing lashes shading the dusky

Young Plants
Every farmer knows that some plants grow better than others. Soil may be the same and seed may seem the same but some plants are weak and others strong.
And that's the way with children. They are like young plants. Same food, same home, same care but some grow big and strong while others stay small and weak.
Scott's Emulsion offers an easy way out of the difficulty. Child weakness often means starvation, not because of lack of food, but because the food does not feed.
Scott's Emulsion really feeds and gives the child growing strength.
Whatever the cause of weakness and failure to grow—Scott's Emulsion seems to find it and set the matter right.

DO YOU GET UP WITH A LAME BACK?
Kidney Trouble Makes You Miserable.
Almost everybody who reads the newspapers is sure to know of the wonderful cures made by Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

It is the great medical triumph of the nineteenth century; discovered after years of scientific research by Dr. Kilmer, the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, and is wonderfully successful in promptly curing lame back, uric acid, catarrh of the bladder and Bright's Disease, which is the worst form of kidney trouble.
Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is not recommended for everything but if you have kidney, liver or bladder trouble it will be found just the remedy you need. It has been tested in so many ways, in hospital work and in private practice, and has proved so successful in every case that a special arrangement has been made by which all readers of this paper, who have not already tried it, may have a sample bottle sent free by mail, also a book telling more about Swamp-Root, and how to find out if you have kidney or bladder trouble. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. The regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles are sold by all good druggists. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

EASY WAY TO CURE CATARRH

Breathe Hyomei and Kill All Catarral Germs. "Money Back If It Fails," Say The Noyes Drug Store.

There is no dangerous stomach drugging when using Hyomei. The healing and aromatic balsams which compose this wonderful treatment are breathed through a neat pocket inhaler that comes with every $1 outfit.

In this way, the germ-killing and health giving Hyomei penetrates to the most remote cells of the lungs. It searches out and kills disease germs in the air passages of the head, throat and nose, soothes and heals the irritated mucous membrane, and absolutely drives catarrh from the system.

Such remarkable results have followed the use of Hyomei by the best people in Norway, that Noyes Drug Store have the greatest confidence in its power to cure catarrh. They believe in it so thoroughly, that they will give their personal guarantee to refund the money if it does not cure, the purchaser to be sole judge.

This is an unusual offer and the first time that any medicine or treatment for the cure of catarrh has been sold in this way. If it cures the expense is trifling, while if it fails, the cost is absolutely nothing.

If you are fortunate enough not to be troubled with catarrh, tell your friends of Noyes Drug Store's offer and get them to take advantage of it.

Part of The Young Woman In Temperance Reform.

MRS. H. C. MUNSON,—Rumford Center.

It is impossible to turn your attention to any subject relating to the improvement of society, without being brought face to face with the fact that, however old the subject of any reform, its promotion must be sought amid circumstances which are to a great extent, if not in some respects wholly new.

The subject of temperance became a subject of interest with the existence of the first glutton and wine-bibber, and, unfortunately, it has grown with our growth, and is new with every succeeding generation—old from the fact that intemperance, like other sins to be fought, existed almost from the beginning of history; and new because we are the victims of the perpetuated evil, either in our own personal indulgence, or in the indulgence of those who impair every form of vitality, and compel us to suffer to the third or fourth generation through heredity, as well as subject us to sorrow, accidents, crimes, insanity, disease and taxation, as the result of their misuse or abuse of liberty.

It is sometimes said the Temperance Reform has made no progress the last two generations, and, without careful inquiry to prove the assumption true, some writers have essayed to give the reason or causes for the decline, to the injury of a reform of such vast and universal interest. To say the right word, and to say it at the right time, and in the right way, will sometimes tax the judgment of the wisest.

It may, however, be safely said, in view of such statistics, as may be gathered from the whole field of Temperance Reform, and such observations as have been made by competent witnesses in the many countries to which the Reform has been extended, that not only is the reiterated assumption untrue, but the facts gathered justify devout thanks to God that increased interest is nearly everywhere discovered; that results have justified the expectations of all except the most sanguine and inexperienced, who know not just how to locate and measure the difficulties that must be overcome in the march of Reform; and that we are seeking as never before to bring out and unite many agencies somewhat neglected, or wastefully and unscientifically employed. Indeed so great are the gains, in some instances, that organizations, specially established, and for many years sustained, with gratifying success, have surrendered their charters, or practically ceased to exist, and in their places are organizations that now can do a better work. That many have misread the signs of the times, and concluding that the evidence of a closer grip, and a most serious resolve, is the sign of declining interest, have joined in a chorus of wails that might far better have been an anthem of rejoicing that would not have misled the ignorant, and added to the discouragement of such as have not yet come to have faith in God and the Right, though professing to hold the faith that removes mountains, while stumbling over ant hills.

There never has been a day in the world's history when interest in the cause of Temperance was so wide spread so serious in its thoughtfulness, so Christian in spirit, and so deeply rooted in the convictions and hopes of the statesmen, who have by their intelligence and their patriotism, been led to stand face to face with the questions affecting the prosperity and destiny of nations.

We all remember the appeals that were made even a quarter of a century ago when we scarcely glanced over the head of the individual with whom we plead, or beyond the family with whom he was connected. It would be unwise to criticise the principles, policies and results of the Temperance Reform from the time of Father Mathews' meetings, the impassioned addresses of John B. Gough, and the last, and most notable spasm of an awakened conscience, known as the Woman's Crusade. It will be unwise to offer criticisms of past endeavors or their methods, for the reason that it would be impossible to avoid misunderstanding of, and injustice to those who, as the pioneers of a great reform, were compelled to teach themselves and us, quite as much by their blunders and defeats, as by their great good fortune in appealing to the emotions, rather than the intellect and patriotism of the people.

In that last united and despairing cry of the motherhood of the Western Hemisphere, was a grand and awful prophesy of the future, and when the motherhood of the continent fell in grief and despair upon the thresholds and floors of the modern saloons, as at the very foot of the Throne of the Eternal God, the womanhood of the world was aroused at the infinite pathos of the gray-haired motherhood of millions, prostrate in their beauty, helpless in the momentary and paroxysmal despair, the speechless grief, and gray hairs, more eloquent than human words, and mightier than an avenging army. With that cry of helplessness the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was born, and born to arouse the whole world by its appeal to the faith of the Christians, the patriotism of the Nations, the industrial interests of commerce and manfactures, the scholars love of wisdom, the altruists compassion for man, and man's hope of heaven.

Such a movement as this by the women of every land, no historian had ever recorded, nor in its inception, its methods and its spirit, will he ever record one more logical to the situation, needed or more timely, or more in accord with the purpose of Him who, as the Lord of Heaven, came to be the servant of man and redeem the earth and make it a paradise of sobriety and love.

And we might say that a statement of the conditions to be met, of the work to be accomplished, and the instrumentalities to be employed, is but a statement of the young woman's part in the work to be done. Indeed, the work of the young woman, differs from that of the woman in general, only as their circumstances, gifts and opportunities differ; and while it might be enough to make a general statement of what both men and women are to do in co-operation, and in this, see the young woman's part, we should not leave so much to be interred or discovered by her, or by those who seek to direct her endeavors, or to utilize her influence in over-coming the evils of what Senator Morrill charactized as "the gigantic crime of crimes."

While we cannot say that the Temperance Reform is the special work of woman, and that upon her wholly depends the success of reform, the triumph of the church and the perpetuity and character of the nation, we can, and we must see, that the work to be done is so serious, and woman's position in society is one of such subtle and wonderful power, for good or evil, that our first duty, without which every other duty will be neglected or fail, is to impress the young womanhood of our land with that understanding and feeling of the importance of this work for time and for eternity, that will lead our young women to ask as with one voice, "What can we do?" and to answer it with a conviction that there is a work which no other class in society can do.

When we consider the social circle in which our young women move and have a large part of their being, we can without difficulty of misunderstanding answer the question by saying: The fact that the younger members of the home come in social contact with the younger members of society, makes it that their special work is with those of their own years and social condition. While not without influence in the home or among the older members of society, it is among her young gentleman friends and acquaintances, who are amid temptations, that a young woman's power, either for good or ill is most strongly felt. And her influence goes upon one side or the other. If her head is empty, if her heart is idle, if her words are silly and her manners are frivolous, then she is a shame to her family, and an injury to every young person with whom she comes in contact. If, on the contrary, she is a womanly young woman, has ideas and emotions worthy of her sex and age; is anxious to do good to all; and be true to herself and to society, then is she in a position to accomplish the mission of young womanhood.

And now, to show the wonderful power of the the young woman's word, work and example, let me tell a little story: A young man of promise was courting a young lady of womanly gifts, and a teacher in the public schools of her State. Both seemed destined to lead useful lives. These young people came to love each other and the young man proposed marriage. The young woman did not say "Yes," and fall in a swoon into the arms of the young man. She was true to herself and true to the young man. He was the slave of tobacco, and the young woman looked honestly and affectionately into the eyes of her lover and told him if he would give up his bad habit, by which the innocent might be poisoned, she would marry him. If he loved tobacco more than the young woman, they must walk separate ways. The young man then having much of the world in his nature felt himself nettled. He was offended. "What business had the young woman to make such a condition, anyway!" There was no marriage, but afterward the young man saw the reasonableness of the condition. He was converted to Christ most soundly, studied for the ministry and became one of the most eminent bishops of his church. But the young lady never married, for she was soon wedded to all humanity through her profession as a teacher and reformer. She attained unsought the highest position ever attained by woman, and accomplished a work that only Heaven can understand. This was our beloved Frances E. Willard; and it was her level-headed common sense reply to the young man's profession of love, that gave to the world two great souls, and to Heaven the tens of hundreds of thousands blessed by their honest, loving endeavors.

Now let me say that it is my solemn, unwavering conviction that if the young women of our land should exercise the same thoughtfulness, and be ready at all times to say the right word and set a womanly example, the temperance reform would be settled in a day, and our divorce courts would be out of business, our jails be closed, our lunatic asylums become far smaller, and a great sum of happiness would be found in the home and the world, we never believed possible on this earth, short of the millennium.

For, while our married women move among the older and more mature, our young women move in society among those from whom the alcoholic liquor traffic must win its recruits, or cease to exist.

It may be said that the place of the mother is in the home, while the place of their daughters is in the world, and among the young men of their years. It is their privilege to influence the young men who will some day be their husbands; and the very fact that no one knows with whom her lot will be cast, and upon whom her happiness will depend, should lead every young woman to join with every other young woman in exercising such an influence for good as will give us homes of sobriety, morality and happiness. Young men respect the words and examples of our young women, and conform their conduct to the ideals of their young lady friends, as to no other class in society. In fact, this is so true that if we are shown the character and habits of the young men of any community, we can readily guess the character and influence of the young women of that community. If profanity, Sabbath breaking, vulgarity of speech, cigarette smoking and tippling exist as habits among the boys and young men, it is positive that the girls, or young women, have taken no pains to show their personal and united disapproval of these home and soul destroying evils; and if these last are ignorant of the woes they are bringing upon their own heads in the future, we must say with all the emphasis possible, that the fathers and mothers have neglected a duty to their children that will bring dishonor to their names, and wretchedness to their souls. The fathers or the mothers, who will neglect to plant in the hearts of their daughters hatred of bad habits and love of the good, will, before God and the community, be held responsible for whatever unhappiness may come into the homes of their children.

For let it not be forgotten that our girls and young women are very easily impressed and made to feel the duties that belong to them, and if they are not sent out into society with a resolve that their every word and act shall be on the right side, and insure that their homes shall be homes of love and happiness, then upon the short-sighted and negligent fathers and mothers must fall the judgment of the life that is now and here. A relative of the writer said he had no need to interest himself in temperance for, as he expressed it, his "boys were all girls." And yet later, the oldest daughter, a lovely Christian girl, was mistaken by a rum-crazed husband for his young wife and he shot her before his very eyes. Not two minutes before, this same young husband in the same drunken anger shot an aged, white haired Christian woman, as she in a motherly spirit advised the young man and wife to go into their rooms and talk over their difficulties instead of making a scene on a public street. To the end of his life the father regretted his heartless remark, and lived the remainder of his life in nightmare terror, fearing the remaining girls might marry certain young tipplers of the neighborhood, and finally fled from the village of many bad young men to a country community, where he learned that thanks to a genuine revival of religion there was not within two and a half miles of a little country church a single boy or young man under twenty-five years of age who touched either tobacco or alcoholic poisons.

My husband plead with a parishioner to join the reform club movement for the sake of the young men of the community over which he had a great influence, but not until an only daughter filled an untimely grave as the victim of a drunken husband did this man see the folly of his course and the foolishness of his reply to my husband's appeals.

We know of illustrations like these sufficient to fill volumes but we need not relate others as painful.

It is evident that the place of the young woman in the temperance and moral reform is one of transcendent importance and power; and those fathers and mothers, who do not see to it that young women of this country are prepared to exercise a right influence among their gentlemen associates, are fathers and mothers who stand squarely in the way of the usefulness and happiness of their daughters, and they are the enemies of the community in which they live and the flag of the country which flies over their heads.

Let it be declared everywhere that the temperance reform and the church of God want young women who know their place and power, good young women, pure minded, true hearted young women whose very presence will bless the young men of all our communities, and make them the worthy husbands of noble souled women. We dare not halt or hesitate in this, if we would win success in a great reform. We want a million young Miss Willards to say the word "No!" to young men of bad habits and low morals. We want a hundred thousand young men, who shall be made bishops, senators, editors of papers, governors of States, and good men generally in the influential walks of society, by the sad hearted "No!" of thoughtful young women, who can by their firmness and their love of God and the right make this world like that to come, blessing not only themselves and the families God may give them, but all the world that shall sing their praises and honor their memories.

The Flat Footed Girl.

For the flat footed girl there is little hope. Very old persons whose muscles are almost dormant and who have difficulty in walking have the flat footed habit. They are usually heavy limbed persons of full habit. For a girl to walk flat footed is almost sinful, as it indicates a phlegmatic, heavy, careless disposition.

The girl who walks flat footed rarely wears good shoes and isn't likely to be well dressed. The flat footed girl is inclined to drag her feet along as if they were too heavy for her to lift. Generally the flat footed girl develops into a fat woman. She is never graceful.

Pansies.

The pansy blossoms please me so,
With faces all awry.
See this one looking at the earth
And that one at the sky.

While this one laughs, that yonder frowns,
And here's one wants to talk,
And all this happens ev'ry day
Just by the garden walk.

PORTLAND GETTING READY.

Plans Already Being Made For the Entertainment of National Grange.

Oregon and Washington are already hustling to give the national grange a grand reception in November, 1904. In the first place, a campaign for increased membership is now being conducted by State Lecturer J. H. T. Smith of Washington, and likewise in Oregon there will be a strong effort made to show a large percentage of increase when the national body convenes.

Evening Star grange, No. 27, of Portland, Ore., is alive to the situation. A resolution was adopted at a recent meeting congratulating State Master Leedy in securing the next meeting for Portland, and a movement was started by the grange to give the eastern grangers an exhibit of green vegetables and fruits that will surprise them in November. Grapes on the vines and strawberries, raspberries, etc., could be shown. It has been suggested that Oregon and Washington combine and make a grand display of farm produce. From the Portland Oregonian we learn that there are some up to date grangers in that locality. Ewartsville grange owns ten acres of land and has built a fine hall. In this hall all the social functions of the neighborhood are held, as well as the regular business meetings of the grange. A Thanksgiving dinner, at which more than 300 were fed, was served in this hall. This grange has established an annual three days' picnic, with a fair and live stock show, where the best stock in Whitman county is shown and liberal premiums are awarded.

B. G. LEEDY.
[Master Oregon state grange.]

Pine Grove grange, at Albino, is the second oldest in the county and has a membership of 140. This grange is out of debt and has a substantial fund in the treasury, which will probably be used to build a hall. The grange is keeping clear of politics and devoting its energies to bettering the social and financial condition of the farmers. Its work is largely social and educational. The first grange was organized in this county about three years ago.

LECTURERS' BULLETINS.

A Means of Communication Between State and Subordinate Granges.

There is growing need of a means of communication between state lecturers and lecturers of subordinate granges. No method is so inexpensive and efficacious as a monthly bulletin, in which the state lecturer may communicate with the subordinate lecturers on assigned topics for discussion, impart information on matters of present or future interest and thus make it possible for the subordinate grange to keep constantly in touch with the state organization. As an example of what we are speaking of we may refer, with high commendation, to the Michigan state grange lecturers' bulletin, edited by Mrs. F. D. Saunders of Rockford, Mich. The advantage of issuing such a bulletin regularly is that it can be entered in the mails as second class mail matter and thus be entitled to the pound rates of postage.

Vermont In Line.

C. J. Bell, master of the Vermont state grange, says that the attendance at the recent session of that body was the largest for twenty years and it was one of the most successful meetings ever held. There are 110 subordinate granges in the state, ninety-five being represented at the state meeting. There are twelve Pomonas in the state. Worthy Master Bell's annual address laid great stress on the need of legislation in the farmer's behalf. Governor J. C. McCullough was the principal speaker at the public meeting. Professor Morse of South Paris, Me., well known in grange circles, was humorist of the occasion.

The Grange Must Do Things.

F. A. Derthick, master of the Ohio state grange, is father of these weighty words: "If a subordinate grange wishes to exert a commanding influence in its community it must have a good financial footing. If it deserves to persuade men and women to join, it must have something to join." The next thing it must have, or the first thing, we would say, is an interesting and profit yielding programme. You haven't much of a grange if it isn't doing something.

Nearly 6,000 Patrons In One County.

Jefferson county, N. Y., is probably the banner grange county in the United States. It has 5,926 Patrons in thirty-two subordinate granges. All New Jersey has only 6,000. Moreover, the state grange dues of every subordinate grange are paid to date. Jefferson is necessarily influential in the grange affairs of the Empire State.

Pennsylvania Patrons.

The gain in the Order's membership in Pennsylvania last year was over 5,000, thirty new granges having been organized. As an instance of their progressiveness Cambria county may be cited, where there are twenty-two granges, sixteen of which own their own halls, valued at $25,000.

MAKING CHEESE.

It Is a Science That Is Not Understood by All Who Undertake It.

The cheesemaker should be more acquainted with the scientific reasons of curing than many profess today, and there is room for improvement in this line which is pretty well recognized by the dairy schools and experiment stations. The growth and development of the bacteria which cure the cheese are something that can be understood so well that it is possible to control the whole process. The man who makes cheese for the market should know how long to hold the cheese to give it a certain flavor and when the curing should cease. It is impossible for any farmer or factory to produce uniform grades of cheese otherwise. On some farms the cheese produced varies so much that it would be impossible to say that the different grades were made by the same man. This is not due so much to the difference in the cows and milk as in the process of making and curing. Some cheese should be cured much faster than others, and again the reverse is the case. Unless one understands the reasons for this it is impossible to produce like results. Every cheesemaker has found that in spite of his best efforts the cheese of one day's work is stiff and dry and that of the next day too moist. In such a case different treatment is demanded. The moist cheese will cure much faster than the stiff and dry cheese, and if the two are handled alike uniform quality cannot be expected.

In the curing there are four factors or conditions that must be considered and brought under control. These are temperature, air, moisture and light. Unless we know how to control these we cannot expect to produce the highest results with the cheese. Temperature probably is the most important and intractable of these factors, and it is something that requires persistent study. A proper temperature in the curing room will often produce good cheese even when other conditions are against the work. The temperature should at first be kept between 65 and 70 degrees and lowered then gradually to 60 degrees. In the spring of the year the temperature should be kept higher, as the cheese should be cured faster. In winter sometimes the temperature toward the end can even descend as low as 50 degrees, but the cheesemaker must be very careful at such times. Good ventilation is essential and also a certain amount of light. The regulation of the light bears an important part in the making of cheese, and we do not yet know all that it will do for us. The moisture of course must be controlled, but that is a matter for each one to solve for himself.—James Ridgeway in American Cultivator.

A Black, Hard Name.

Few persons are aware that the Chinese language is dependent on intonation for its meaning and that a slight difference in sound may so distort a person's meaning that a courteous salutation may be turned into a cause for regret.

A young woman in San Francisco, who had become interested in the Chinese there, went to one of the men who owned a paper in which he wrote both Chinese and English editorials, and asked him to teach her some phrases. When told that the language consisted of something like a small library or two of reference books, she was about ready to back out. However, being anxious to learn even a few things about the mysterious people, she undertook a lesson or two.

The young lady being apt at learning new things, thought she was better posted than she was and, meeting the teacher on the street one afternoon, put her newly acquired information to the test.

It was with unusual confidence that she bade him "good afternoon" in a blithe voice and was stepping down from the curb to cross the street.

"Wait," said the editor. "I cannot let you go, Miss C., without explaining. You think you said a good day to me but instead you have called me a very black, hard name."

Cleanse the inside of the coffeepot every few days with a thorough salting and rinsing.

A Sadly Mercenary View.

"You say that you do not favor an increase of the salaries of members of either house of congress?"

"That is my position," replied Senator Sorghum. "If the salary gets large enough to amount to anything some of my friends among the corporations may assume that I ought to be satisfied with it and not expect any further consideration from them."—Washington Star.

Business is booming at the two steam mills and one water power mill. It makes business lively at Redding.

General Fishing Laws.

Sportsmen living beyond the state of Maine, cannot enter upon the wild lands of the state, with intent to camp and kindle fires thereon, unless in charge of a registered guide, either for fishing or hunting. No license fee is demanded for the fishing privileges. One guide may guide five persons under the law. Fishermen staying at camps, who merely go out for fishing without camping or building fires, do not have to employ a guide. The above provisions do not apply to bona fide residents of Maine. The general open season for the catching of the game fishes of Maine are as follows:

Sea Salmon may be taken with single hook and line until September fifteenth.

Landlocked Salmon (so-called) may be taken with single hook and line, in the ordinary method of trolling or with artificial flies, generally from the going out of the ice in the spring until the last day of September, inclusive, although Kennebec country waters and the St. Croix waters close September fifteenth.

Trout and Togue come under the same general conditions as do the landlocked salmon, above.

Black Bass are not protected in Maine by any general law, although in some cases, special laws have been made to cover ponds and preventtheir being fished out; but in general one may catch these fish anywhere in Maine with the usual methods, of bait, troll and fly outfits.

White Perch may be taken at all times during the year, except during the spawning period, from May first to July first, during which period, if one is caught on a troll out for other fish, it may be retained if one desires.

The Weight permitted is not more than 25 pounds of fish to any person in one day, nor may any person or corporation carry or have carried more than 25 pounds of any or all of these fish at a time for one person. And the person owning such fish must accompany them, except in the case of the Shipping Tag which may be purchased of the commissioners at Augusta, and for which one may ship ten pounds or one fish to his home anywhere, or to a hospital within the state, on payment of $1.00, or for white perch 50 cents.

It is Unlawful to use nets, dynamite, spears, grapnel, fish spawn, or in fact take fish by any other than the usual method of angling with hook and line. And no salmon under nine inches, or trout under five inches, may be taken at all.

Nash, the Taxidermist.

The Maine Woods says.—Capt. J. Waldo Nash, the popular taxidermist of Norway, has opened his store on the midway between the Mooselookmeguntic House and the Mountain View House. The opening was Thursday night May 19th and according to all reports it was a success. Capt. Nash reports that the prospect for business from his view is most excellent. During the past year he mounted all of the fish and game for the Grand Trunk railroad exhibit at the World's fair; he furnished all of the fish and game for the Grand Trunk exhibit at the Sportsmen's show in New York this year. He mounted all of the fish for the Intercolonial railway exhibit at the World's fair. The advertising agent of the Intercolonial W. L. Creigton, was so well pleased with the work by Mr. Nash that he had the exhibit entered in Mr. Nash's name for the gold medal for fish mounting.

Mr. Nash has patented his mezzo method of mounting fish in the Canadian Provinces. He got his patent in the United States a year ago last April. In less than five days after the Canadian government accepted Capt. Nash's patent, Emack Brothers, the leading taxidermist in Canada had a member of the firm, Miles Emack, in Norway for the purpose of arranging with Capt. Nash to mount fish in Canada by his process and pay him a royalty on all they mount.

S. A. Stevens, who has been with his daughter the past winter, returned to his home at Norway Lake, the past week.

Sadie Millett, who has been very sick this winter at her home in Millettville, was in the village last week. Before her illness she was the teacher of the lower primary school.

Willam E. Ballard of Frost Hill was taken to the Central Maine General Hospital at Lewiston, Saturday by Mason F. Frost, to have the plaster of paris cast taken from his leg that he has worn the past three months.

Mrs. Jessie Rowe Lemieux died Tuesday of last week at her home next to tannery bridge on Main street, aged about 52 years. She came here last fall from Rumford Falls, and had been sick but a day or two, the cause of death being apoplexy. She was a native of Canada, and leaves, besides her husband, two sons and two daughters. Burial was at Rumford Falls, Thursday.

L. I. Gilbert was in Portland, Friday evening.

Lakeside Lodge, N. E. O. P., visited a lodge of the order in Auburn, last Friday evening.

The selectmen have located a private way on Frost hill to the residence of Fred S. Frost.

Steamer Pennesseewassee commenced regular trips Sunday, on which day she carried a good crowd.

Miss S. B. Prince received an injury to her eye, Friday, by striking it with a screwdriver with which she was working.

The degree staff of Norway Grange went to West Minot, Saturday, and in the evening exemplified the fourth degree.

Mr. and Mrs. F. Q. Elliott are thinking of not living on their farm at North Norway this summer as in several seasons past.

Mrs. James Grant is very ill at the home of her daughter, Mrs. James True, and her daughters from New Hampshire and Massachusetts are with her.

Invitations have been received for the wedding to be held at the Baptist church in Roslindale, Mass., June 8, of William Roy Amidon and Lillian Ruth Noyes, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles D. Noyes. Mr. Noyes is a Maine boy, a native of Greenwood.

Had Seven Gallons Left.

Messrs. Leachman & Edelin, Grafton, W. Va., had been selling a paint, which they thought well of: and this had occurred.

They had sold a customer 18 gallons of it to paint his house. A few years later, they sold the same man Devoe lead-and-zinc the same number of gallons to paint the same house. He had 7 gallons left.

The point of the tale is: 11 gallons Devoe paints an 18-gallon house.

Of course, that isn't all.

Why does 11 gallons Devoe go as far as 18 gallons of other paint? Because it is all paint, all true, no sham, and full measure.

But that isn't all. Devoe lasts longer. No, no; you haven't got to wait ten years to find that out. Ten thousand people know it. They think a heap of Devoe. There's no difficulty in showing our townspeople what to expect of Devoe. $10 will paint a $15 house; and the paint'll last twice as long.

10 F. P. STONE.

Grace Hall of Norway, has been staying in Mechanic Falls.

C. E. Marshall of Portland, Chief Clerk in the Railway Mail Service, was in Norway and South Paris on business, Friday.

A Democratic caucus is called at the Opera House, Saturday afternoon at 2, to choose two delegates each, to the State convention in Waterville, July 14, the district convention in Auburn, June 1, and the county convention in South Paris July 8; also to choose town committee.

There was a good sized gathering at the high school room, Thursday evening, when Rev. B. S. Rideout gave a lecture on his Washington trip, describing the streets and public buildings of the National Capital, especially the Congressional Library and Washington Monument, also Mount Vernon, and from his trip drew lessons helpful and interesting.

Nettie P. Grant of Mechanic Falls, sang soprano in the quartette at the Congregational church, Sunday the 15th. The Mechanic Falls paper says:—It came as a distinct compliment to Miss Grant that a church which has always maintained such a high standard of choir work should invite her to sing with them in the absence of the regular soprano.

NORTH FRYEBURG.

The Eromathean Club.

Undaunted by the rain, more than half the members of the Eromathean Club gathered at the home of May Hastings, North Fryeburg, Thursday, May 19th, and were amply repaid for their efforts. The afternoon's work was:

Club chorus.....
Roll call, answered by quotations from Greek Philosophers.....

BETHEL.

Grover Hill.

Rain has retarded planting quite a good deal.

F. Powers has moved to the Edwin Smith farm.

Walter M. Brown recently visited relatives in Waterford.

A. B. Grover has a young span of gray fillies, Myrtice May and Persis I.

Galon Wheeler is going to stay with his brother, P. Wheeler, for a while.

A very rainy night Thursday prevented many from attending the reception given by Mr. and Mrs. Edwin W. Rolfe.

The air is now odorous with the fragrance of apple blossoms, and the humming-birds and bees are kept busy gathering the hidden sweets.

Marshall and Leslie Whitman from Greenwood were on Grover Hill recently. We are glad to hear that their brother Pearl, who has been dangerously ill, is slowly convalescing.

Mrs. Rosa Adams, niece of the late General Roger Hanson, C. S. A., wants every woman to know of the wonders accomplished by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I cannot tell you with pen and ink what good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for me, suffering from the ills peculiar to the sex, extreme lassitude and that all gone feeling. I would rise from my bed in the morning feeling more tired than when I went to bed, but before I had used two bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, I began to feel the buoyancy of my younger days returning, became regular, could do more work and not feel tired than I had ever been able to do before, so I continued to use it until I was restored to perfect health. It is indeed a boon to sick women and I heartily recommend it. Yours very truly, MRS. ROSA ADAMS, 819 12th St., Louisville, Ky."

Any women who are troubled with irregular or painful menstruation, weakness, leucorrhœa, displacement or ulceration of the womb, that bearing-down feeling, inflammation of the ovaries, backache, general debility, and nervous prostration, should know there is one tried and true remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. No other medicine for women has received such wide-spread and unqualified indorsement. No other medicine has such a record of female cures.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I am very pleased to recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for womb and ovarian difficulties from which I have been a sufferer for years. It was the only medicine which was at all beneficial, and within a week after I started to use it, there was a great change in my feelings and looks. I used it for a little over three months, and at the end of that time I suffered no pain at the menstrual period, nor was I troubled with those distressing pains which compelled me to go to bed, and I have not had a headache since. This is nearly a year ago. I always keep a bottle on hand, and take a few doses every week, for I find that it tones up the system and keeps me feeling strong, and I never have that tired out feeling any more.

"I certainly think that every woman ought to try this grand medicine, for it would prove its worth. Yours very truly, MISS ELSIE DANFORTH, 203 De Soto St., Memphis, Tenn."

FREE MEDICAL ADVICE TO WOMEN.
Don't hesitate to write to Mrs. Pinkham. She will understand your case perfectly, and will treat you with kindness. Her advice is free, and the address is Lynn, Mass. No woman ever regretted having written her, and she has helped thousands.

Man's Fatal Mistake.

The young man who marries a sickly girl makes an equally fatal mistake. When a warm-hearted and generous young fellow falls in love with an etheral looking young creature, her very delicacy gives her an added charm. He pictures himself chivalrously protecting and cherishing her, and keeping the very wind from blowing coldly upon her, and thus winning the roses back to her cheeks like the hero does in a Laura Jean Libby novel, and he goes and marries her on that romantic hypothesis. Do you suppose that if he had any conception of what having an invalid wife means to a man he would do it? Not on your life. If he is a poor man, it means that he spends his days toiling to pay drug bills and doctor' bills. Whether he is rich or poor; it means that he goes home at night to a ill kept house, to darkened rooms; to humoring a sick person's whims, to querulous complaints, and hysterics and nerves. There is no martyr in all the calendar of saints more deserving of our reverence and adoration than the husband who bears patiently with an invalid wife, but any man who is kept from getting himself into such a scrape as marrying a delicate woman ought to erect a monument to the person who saved his life.

RESOLUTIONS BY OXFORD COUNTY TEACHERS' CONVENTION.

The teachers of Oxford County in convention at Oxford, Maine, on May 13 and 14, 1904, assembled hereby adopt the following resolutions:

RESOLVED, that we tender our thanks to the citizens of Oxford for their many courtesies, to the Portland and Rumford Falls and Grand Trunk Railway System for their helpful reduction of rates; to the officers and committees of the association whose labors insured the success of the convention; to the press of the county which has gratuitously advertised our meeting; and to the speakers from outside the county whose efforts were so helpful; and further be it

RESOLVED, that these resolutions be made a part of our records and that copies be sent to the papers of the county for publication.

Respectfully submitted

blue of her eyes. She stood, full veined, exultant, under the white candles, her dress dove colored, flowered in large trees, with cherry tinted stays trimmed in blue and silver. On her hair, drawn high, sat a weblike capuchin.

Jarrat's face sprang scarlet—a hopeless, helpless rage of bitter longing. With him it was moth and flame, and the wing singeing had become a joy of torture.

The Marquis de la Trouerie passed into the assembly. Gallants crowded to greet him. Brooke fawned upon his hand. He became a sun with a train of lesser satellites. He moved leisurely through the throng, answering the shafts of the wits, bowing to plump Mrs. Byrd among the dowagers, approaching the end of the room, where Anne, beside Colonel Tillotson's soldierly black, held her constant court, gilded by the effulgence which the open worship of the favorite of fashion had thrown upon her.

Very lovely she looked to Breckinridge Cary, just arrived on a visit from Lancaster. He watched her from where he chatted with Byrd, whom he had last seen in Covent Garden shortly before he left England for home. He had known her from a child at Gladden Hall. The old world, he thought, could never have bred her; she was fruit of the new, of its fire and full blood, its daring, its pride and prodigality, born of its dewy valleys and its untouched, cavernous forests, a thing that must have withered in the heavy air of London.

"Yonder comes our glass of fashion, Mr. Cary," boasted Brooke, joining them. "Ah, you can always tell your real nobleman! What a waistcoat!" he simpered, ogling it rapturously. "Demme if Master Coolbaugh shall not cut me one like it!"

Cary looked with a flash of recognition that broadened into a stare of amazement. He saw a figure incased splendidly in satin, with rare point dropping from the sleeves, jewels gleaming from the ruffles, a sword hilt on which blood rubies burned, a breast sparkling with a bediamoned order.

"The marquis is late," Brooke added.

"The marquis?" Cary's eyes opened wide.

Noyes Drug Store Give Guarantee Bond With Mi-o-na, Nature's Cure for Dyspepsia.

Noyes Drug Store have made arrangements to sell Mi-o-na, the marvelous digestion regulator in a new and hitherto unheard of way, furnishing a guarantee bond with every package.

GUARANTEE BOND

In purchasing a 50c box of Mi-o-na the purchaser is requested to have this guarantee signed by Noyes Drug Store as their personal agreement to refund the money on return of empty box if Mi-o-na fails to cure dyspepsia and all stomach troubles.

Signed.....

Noyes Drug Store will give the above bond with every 50c box of Mi-o-na they sell. You run no risk in buying Mi-o-na.

That everyone may have faith in this scientific cure for dyspepsia, Mi-o-na is sold under a positive guarantee to refund the money if it does not do all that is claimed for it.

Everyone who is troubled with dyspepsia, headache, distress after eating, dizzy feeling or loss of appetite or who is losing weight and in a rundown condition, should take the guarantee bond to Noyes Drug Store and commence the use of Mi-o-na at their risk, remembering that the treatment costs you nothing unless it does all that is claimed for it.

Memorial.

Beat slowly, drums, and low,
And hush the fife's shrill cry;
The tattered remnant of a band
Of heroes marches by.
Bare heads, and lowly bow,
This hoary, feeble band,
Are all that's left us now
Of those who saved our land.

Beat slowly, drums, and fifes
Breathe soft, that all may know
The boys in blue are marching by,
Who marched so long ago
To the bellowing of guns,—
To the scream of shot and shell,—
Beat softly, slowly, drums,
For the hallowed ones who fell.

Where fields ran red with blood,
These veterans have fought.
Invincible they stood
And mightily they wrought.
Their monument today,—
Our country,—stands to prove,
Forever and for aye
Their loyalty and love.

With feeble steps and slow,
They go to decorate
The graves of high and low,
The humble ones and great.
Who with them bore the brunt
Of mad Secession's blow,
Their comrades at the front,—
Breathe softly, fifes, and low.

Hats off, and bow each head,—
Breathe softly fifes and slow,
For those now reckoned with the dead,
Who marched a year ago.
Their ranks are thinning fast,—
Roll soft and low each drum,
For comrades of the past,
Who never more shall come

In uniform of blue,
That mortal eyes may see;
But who shall tell the hidden things
Concealed from you and me.
But cast the garlands down
Upon each sacred mound—
And let the colors crown
Each temple of the ground.

The way grows short before,
O'er which their feet must go—
To reach the other shore,—
Beat softly drums and slow.

CORA M. W. GREENLEAF.

Life's Tangled Web.

Come let us recount now Life's favors;
On our griefs we have dwelt full long,
Each one of our 'plaints we have numbered,
Each unfulfilled hope, and each wrong.

We've chased some vague shadowy vision,
Like the will-o-the-wisp's golden glow,
As glimmering it rides on the darkness
So transiently to and fro.

We've repined o'er the grave of some longing
In the Heart's secret chamber alone,
Like the loss of a heart's deep affection,—
Estranged, and all happiness flown.

Still we've solace of sunshine in plenty,
The bright earth and blue arch above,
With life so dear and friendship,
And bending o'er all Heaven's love.

For us smiles each landscape in nature,
Rich notes of the oriole's song
Well forth from a breast overflowing
To brighten our journey along.

We see in each grass blade and floweret
A greeting of welcome to all,
Thro' One who gives comfort and healing,
Who noteth the sparrow's fall.

And I think e'en the great solar system—
The plan of each planet free,
And the mystic and bright tinted rainbow
Were placed there for you and for me.

And tho' hearts prove froward and thankless,
And Life's ills come many and fast,
We may still taste from Faith's golden goblet
Of a Future resplendent at last.

Repine not o'er wrongs, 'tis unworthy,
Surmounting each trial and fate,
Keep the face toward the Heavenly portals
And patiently labor and wait.

Fewer Night Calls.

Physicians Now Try to Tell Patients What Is Going to Happen to Them.

"Thank heaven I'm not a doctor," said the patient. "I shouldn't fancy being turned out of my bed every night, in such a winter as we've just gone through. B-r-r-r-r!"

The physician smiled as he polished the clinical thermometer.

"I dare say you wouldn't; neither do the doctors," he said. "I've been in pretty constant attendance here the past six weeks. How many night calls have you sent for me?"

"Why, none at all; but my case is an exception."

"Not in the least, so far as night calls are concerned. The patient with a touch of liver is more likely to pull the doctor out of his bed at midnight than the helpless invalid—if we let him. But we don't let him.

"The doctor's night bell has been practically abolished. A physician of the younger school doesn't average a night call in a week. This is one of the little triumphs of modern medicine that has made no stir in the papers."

"Have you persuaded people to be sick in the daytime?"

"That's it, exactly. The worst disease some patients have is the doctor habit. We've cured it.

"Modern therapeutics includes not only treatment of a malady, but also a close forecast of its possible course. The physician trains his patients to leave him alone unless a real emergency arises.

"He makes his diagnosis and prescribes, and tells the patients just what he may expect in the way of new developments in the next twenty-four hours: 'About 6 or 8 o'clock this evening you will feel so-and-so; that's all right, the sensation may not be pleasant but there's no occasion for alarm—don't send for me. If, on the other hand, you feel thus-and-so, just call me up by telephone.

"Then, in the greater number of serious cases nowadays, the trained nurse is a factor, and she very seldom calls the doctor in the night. Nurse and physician work together, and most contingencies are foreseen and provided for.

"Our diagnosis of the future is now so accurate that it is a reflection on a physician's skill to have many night calls. There is, however, the practitioner of the old school—the night-bell doctor. He follows the symptoms instead of anticipating them.

"The contingency that pulls the night bell doctor out of bed is as new to him as to the patient. He follows on behind the disease, fighting from the rear like an old volunteer fireman. The younger doctor fights the disease many hours in advance—gets into the path of the conflagration and drive it back upon itself.

"Even births are taken in hand months ahead of the event and managed so that an unforeseen emergency is rare. Therefore, when you say that you wouldn't fancy being a physician, you mean that you wouldn't care to be a night bell doctor. If your diploma were dated anywhere within ten or fifteen years, however, you'd be reasonably sure that your day's work was over when you touched the pillows."

Festival of the Dead.

The 30th of May is essentially the festival of our soldier dead; let us in a firm yet courteous way, frown upon all attempts to make the day one of mere recreation or of frivolous display with attendant disapation; and seek to impress upon all that this day of all days of the year; is one on which we meet to honor the memory of those, who having finished their course with honor, and crossed the star-lit line, now rest peacefully under the trees on the "eternal camping ground."

Pity the sorrows of the poor city and town assessors who are trying to decide whether they will advance the rate per cent. of taxes or shove up the valuation so as to cover in the cost of running things without giving cause for offense.

Scribner Magazine for June contains an article of remarkable historical importance. Within a few months there has been discovered in New York city a mass of manuscript material throwing much new light on the most romantic chapter in the records of American exploration—the transcontinental expedition made by Lewis and Clark in 1803-6.

Robert Grant's serial, "The Undercurrent," brings forward the complication resulting from the divorce question.

CLOTHES FOR ACTIVE MEN.

The harder you are on your clothes, the more reason for being sure they're Hart, Shaffner & Marx clothes.

These clothes are not only made to look well; but they're made for wear. And as long as they wear, they look well.

You will find them the most economical clothes you ever had, both for the service they'll give you, and for the satisfaction in appearances you will get.
